The market literally CANNOT be halted. All that happens now is, during the break, everyone sells. Then when it goes live again, half of those sell orders (or more) can't be filled with opposite buy orders.

Price keeps plunging and many sellers are unable to sell, as they would be if it was just left live. So even though trading 'stops', the freefall is still happening and the break has no real effect except more panic.

Imagine owning stock through a brokerage. Imagine having 40k invested. Who do you think gets to sell first? You with TD amerifag? Or dr.shekleberg with 4 million whos broker goes to the same temple with wall Street connections to beat all your trades out by milliseconds with special software. I have a friend who helped develop said software and also worked on govt infiltration software for a MAJOR software developer. The only two investments you should ever make are real estate, and your physical/mental health. Everything else is gambling.

Everyone between millenial and boomer who puts their life savings into amazon stocks out of greed and hubris is about to get BTFO.

Institutional investors will be fine because they know to surf the waves and never sell. It's the average worker-investor who panics and pulls out, losing everything. Then the smart money buys the stocks back at a fraction of the price. Huge wealth transfer upwards.

The great depression and Hitler was the last financial happening for a long time. The Jews know that if the FDIC collapses in the event of another bank run they'll all be hung from lampposts. The stock market crash did not cause the great depression, the bank runs did. Today accounts are insured up to $100k I think.

Yeah and millions of people lost decades of savings, houses, jobs etc every time. A company's stock price also affects its liquidity and credit rating. A company can go bust just by losing a lot of share value.

Not ton mention house prices are not related to stock prices

In 2008 housing crashed which then crashed some invistment banks which caused a stock market sell off

This is a 100% panic sell people thinking trade from China being shut down is going to kill earnings for 2020 and they are trying to get their profit out

Hell most of it is probably automatic at t in is point where machines are just dumping shit automatically due to the Dow number
